What has been the most memorable part of the web of the year for you?,,,Amazon has pissed off a lot of small businesses. I ' m not even going to get into all of the, but earlier this month, the company. The app is called Price Check, and it allows users to go into a store, scan a product, find it for a cheaper price through Amazon, and purchase it immediately. Oh, and Amazon gave users discounts of up to 5% when using the app on some items last weekend.
Brick and mortars were and continue to be, but Amazon maintains it actually helps small businesses.
What do you think? Does Amazon help or hurt small businesses?.,The categories available within Price Check include: Books, Textbooks, Movies, Music, Video Games, CDs, Electronics, Home & Garden, Automotive, Baby, Beauty, Camera & Photo, Cell Phone & Services, Clothing, Computers, Grocery, Health & Personal Care, Home Improvement, Industrial & Scientific, Jewelry, Kindle, Kitchen & Dining, Magazines, Music Instruments, Office Products, Patio & Garden, Shoes, Software, Sports & Outdoors, Video, & Watches.
User reviewsare pretty positive. The average rating is 4.3 out of 5. At the time of this writing, it has 120 5-star reviews, 32 4-star reviews, 15 3-star reviews, 9 2-star reviews and 8 1-star reviews.
Here ' s a sampling of what people who have rated it 5 stars had to say:Brilliant.A very simple and easy UI. Allows you to make quick comparisons, so you can make the best decisions when out shopping.Love this. Love Amazon! What more is there to say, it ' s Amazon.Awesome app. Works great.Will definitely find a better price.
Here ' s a sampling from the 1-star and 2-star reviews:
This doesn ' t benefit the user any more than any barcode scanner. All it does is turn users into tools of amazon researchers.
Everything it does, the original Amazon app does as well, including barcode & camera search, and wishlist & account management. Completely redundant.
I hate the limited interface. I am used to reading reviews and comparing similar products. This app feels like a small prison. The bar code scanner is waaaaaay too finicky, unlike other android scanner apps. Overall 2 stars rating from me.
Some other ones indicate there are bugs and crashes.
Again, however, the majority seem to be pretty pleased with it. And why not? Really, what ' s not to like from the user perspective? Especially in this economy. Consumers want to save a buck wherever they can.
But that doesn ' t mean small businesses are pleased. There has been outcry about this from businesses since it was introduced.
Republican Senator Olympia Snowe, recently spoke out about the app in favor of small business ' . She is: " Amazon ' s promotion — paying consumers to visit small businesses and leave empty-handed — is an attack on Main Street businesses that employ workers in our communities. Small businesses are fighting everyday to compete with giant retailers, such as Amazon, and incentivizing consumers to spy on local shops is a bridge too far. " As previously reported, the Retail Industry

Leaders Association's VP of public affairs, Katherine Lugar, said: "Retailers compete on price 365 days a year, and at no time is that competition hotter than during the make-or-break holiday shopping season. However, by continuing to evade collecting state sales taxes, Amazon's exploitation of a pre-Internet tax loophole is resulting in a 6-10 percent perceived price advantage over their competitors on Main Street." "Amazon's aggressive promotion of its Price Check App shows the lengths they are willing to go to exploit this tax loophole, and is a stark reminder of why Congress needs to act to protect retailers on Main Street. A failure to act is an implicit endorsement of a subsidy of Amazon, a subsidy that distorts the free market and puts jobs on Main Street at risk." "Main Street retailers have been forced to compete on an uneven playing field for too long. Retailers cannot afford another holiday season where they are forced to compete on an uneven playing field." Obviously, Amazon doesn't think it deserves all of this harsh criticism. The New York Times a statement from Amazon spokeswoman Sally Fouts this week, who said the controversial app was "primarily intended for customers who are comparing prices in major retail chain stores," and that Amazon's third-party sellers, which she says includes "more than two million individuals and businesses of all sizes that sell on Amazon" benefit from the app as well. The promotion in question may be old news at this point, but the app is still fresh, and has received a lot of attention. Clearly, based on the reviews above, users like it. Combine that with the brand power of Amazon, and one has to assume that this thing is going to be on a whole lot of smartphones, being used by a whole lot of consumers in a whole lot of stores. Just because the that promotion is over, doesn't mean people won't be tempted to look for cheaper prices on Amazon. Of course they could've been doing this already, but having an app specifically for this purpose makes it more convenient than ever. And it's not as if Amazon can't launch similar promotions in the future. Do you run a small business? What is your take on the app and Amazon in general?., More and more consumers are being pulled away from traditional television and are turning to online video for both news and entertainment. According to, the host of, this trend is largely because online video is "more irreverent, a little wilder, and little bit more fun." With a background in both traditional and digital forms of media, Uygur understands the differences between conventional television and online video very well. If you remember, Uygur had his earlier this year for, as he put it, his tone in regards to politics and Washington. The cable network offered him another show during a different time slot, but Uygur declined the offer. He, instead, turned his efforts to his online show The Young Turks because he doesn't think TV is the "end all beat all." Is traditional television becoming irrelevant? As he explained to WebProNews, the traditional news format puts you in a box. For example, on MSNBC, he said that politicians represent their donors instead of the people. Even though this boldness gave him good ratings, it ultimately didn't matter to MSNBC management. The story online, however, is quite different because there is much more freedom. "Online, you can do anything you like," said Uygur. "There are no gatekeepers, there are no executive producers you get to let people know what the reality is." "Since there are no gatekeepers, it opens up the media for everybody," he added. Uygur told us that he believed more people would transition to online video going forward. Incidentally, the latest found that one in three consumers is watching more online video content than one year ago. Although it is not easy to be successful online, he said that there are a lot more opportunities online as opposed to offline because the corporate hoops do not exist. Uygur pointed out that, while these opportunities are beneficial for the growth of online video, they are detrimental to traditional television networks. "These old television networks are big ships that are hard to turn around," he said. "I think, at some point, they're going to hit an iceberg." Uygur went on to say that he believed online video and television would eventually merge and that people would forget they were ever different. "When that happens, I kinda feel bad for the networks," he said. "I feel bad that we're gonna rip them up." While Uygur plans to continue his online program, he will also debut his show on December 5. He did, however, assure us that he would display the same honesty and freedom on Current TV as he does online. “ We ’ re here to serve the audience, and if we veer from that, believe me, the audience lets us know, ” said Uygur.,,The leaves on the trees are changing and as ever we must change our style to survive the winter months. Looking glamorous takes more effort in the winter especially if you want to keep updating your style but cannot afford to constantly buy more statement boots and coats. You need a new way to keep your style fresh. Big chunky jewellery is one of this seasons key trends, you can wear it over the top of jumpers to create a bright colourful look perfect for jazzing up dreary grey days. Check out Jackie Brazil's collection of designer jewellery, inspired by the vibrant colours of tropical Brazil, it is perfect to cheer you up in the winter month, and bright statement jewellery instantly and easily transforms your look. One of the other key trends that has emerged this season is the use of silver charms to customise clothes and accessories. All the major designers have charms in their fall collection. Everyone from Tiffany & Co. to Kate Moss and Juicy Couture are into this trend at the moment. They used to only be put onto charm bracelets, they would be soldered on and left on the charm bracelet permanently. Now designers have created innovative silver charms that have easy attachable clasps. Having a trigger clasp, (which are often used as fastenings on necklaces), means that you can easily clip on the charms that you want to wear that day and take off others that don't match. You don't have to stick with a cluttered charm bracelet which always looks the same, you can switch them around, choosing whatever styles and colours you want. It makes accessorising an outfit a whole lot easier! Lots of designers are also using charms on handbags, necklaces and key rings which means that you can buy one charm and use it in lots of different ways. The other good thing about is that there are so many available. You are not restricted to boring traditional charms, but can get lots of cool ones. Lots are coated in enamel so they can be colourful and individual, there are stylish diamond set charms and ones touched with gold plating which makes them luxurious but still affordable, you can get these high quality silver charms for between &#pound;10 and &#pound;35. So silver charms can make great gifts for others (as well as for yourself!). If you buy charms made of silver you can be sure that they will last a long time, that is why they are often given as presents to mark special occasions. I would definitely recommend getting the charms with trigger clasps they will cost slightly more when you first purchase them, but there will be no need for additional work afterwards to get them attached to your jewellery. It will probably cost about &#pound;10 to get a charm soldered onto a bracelet which is about the same as a good quality and secure silver trigger clasp, the difference is that you can move around the ones with the the clasp whereas any soldered charm will have to stay where it is first put. Silver charms are definitely a fashionable accessory this season, make yourself stand out with the wide variety of silver charms that are available.,, Charm bracelets are a classic accessory, one that rarely goes out of fashion and never seems to lose their, well...charm. And it's obvious why. Not only are they a gorgeous piece of jewellery, but they can take so many different forms and appeal to a diverse customer base to suit all budgets. Charms, pendants and trinkets can also be worn on necklaces and matching earrings to make a complete set. Charms have been worn for thousands of years; in ancient Egypt unique charm bracelets were worn as amulets to ward off evil spirits, while medieval knights wore them as protection in battle. Even Queen Victoria is said to have been a bit of a fan! She wore a charm that held little lockets containing tiny pictures of her children. So the question 'are charm bracelets back in fashion?' is a little redundant because quite simply they never left! Perhaps the most famous type of charm bracelet is the Italian charm, which is a modular bracelet on which different appendages can be added on to the surface of the link. However, most charms involve dangling trinkets. And there are some genuinely unique charm bracelets on the market nowadays, with pendants including natural seeds, wood, silver, glass and a whole variety of semi-precious and precious stones. And there's a range of prices to choose from: you can blow a staggering &#pound;50,000

(US$35,000) on a single Tiffany bracelet if you so desire. Or prices can be as low as £18 (US$13) for a beautiful costume jewellery version. But what's so great about charm bracelets is that they enable the wearer to express themselves. In a world of mass-produced, throwaway jewellery, a unique charm bracelet is a truly personalised keepsake. You can choose bracelets that feature appendages that symbolise love, friendship or health and longevity, to name just a few. That's why charm bracelets make ideal gifts. After all, what better way to express thanks, love or any other range of feelings towards a special person than with a real symbol that they can wear and feel every time they wear it? You can even find fair trade and eco-friendly charm bracelets, as well as vintage, beaded and mini-lockets just like Queen Victoria's. So where will the fashion in charm bracelets take us next? We're seeing the ethnic or tribal look becoming a steady favourite, while the emphasis on affordability is more important than ever. Fair trade jewellery is also growing in popularity. But one thing's for sure: charm bracelets are here to stay. Millions of women around the world are telling us that a unique charm bracelet is as popular as ever!
